

ABSTRACT

A method of reviewing patient conditions and assessing treatment protocols is disclosed. In specific implementations, the method comprises determining both the patient's subjective medical condition and objective medical condition, and then combining information about the subjective and objective conditions to generate a treatment index. This treatment index is used to determine appropriate treatment frequency.